Auditory Fatigue

By Chelle Wyatt

At a recent meeting of my local chapter of the Hearing Loss Association of America (HLAA), Susan Naidu, an audiologist at the University of Utah, spoke about auditory fatigue, also called listener fatigue or cognitive energy fatigue. According to Susan, this “real condition is not discussed or researched enough.” It isn’t clinically recognized but many professionals are familiar with it—and those of us with hearing loss certainly experience it on a regular basis.

Some people with hearing loss feel stupid when they don’t get all that’s said; they start tuning out. But the culprit can be auditory fatigue which occurs because of the “energy it takes to fulfill the complexity of listening, to help the brain comprehend what you’re listening to.” Listening with a hearing loss burns a lot of mental energy which makes them physically exhausted as well.

Spending this extra cognitive energy affects our ability to remember things; with so much going on in the mind, it’s tough to find a place to stash the information. In meetings, we are so intent on understanding the words as they are said, that we may not retain of the meeting’s information. Because of this intense concentration, some hard of hearing employees end up taking more sick days. The mental stress affects them to the point of illness. Workers may also recuperate by avoiding evening and weekend social activity. To avoid auditory fatigue, it’s tempting to avoid going to that party, the play or lecture and stay home and watch TV with captions.

Susan introduced us to Kathleen Pichora-Fuller's work on hearing loss and cognitive energy. In the abstract, Kathleen asks: "How can audiologists better understand and find ways to counteract the factors underlying why listeners may decide to quit participating in activities because it takes too much effort to listen? How can audiologists help listeners to strategically deploy their available cognitive capacity in situations where it is hard to listen? How can audiologists prevent listeners from avoiding situations and withdrawing from social participation because it is too hard to listen?

In another study, Effort and Displeasure in People Who Are Hard of Hearing, Mohan Matthen at the University of Toronto looks at why some hard of hearing people are more successful at socializing than others, and suggests that audiologists should focus on training their clients to pursue listening enjoyment to reduce stress and difficulty. Make the reward "I will understand."

What are some of things you can do to ease the cognitive overload and enjoy hearing again?

- Think about the environment, talk to the event coordinators, find out if the venue has assistive listening devices such as the CaptivView at theaters or live captioned performances.
- Express your listening needs: face me, speak up, slow down, etc.
- Speak in a quiet room with family members at large gatherings one or two at a time.
- At work, avoid noisy employee environments.
- Take hearing breaks—read instead of watching TV.

The Sanderson Community Center 55+ Senior Program

By Joene Nicolaisen

When establishing the Division of Services to the Deaf and Hard of Hearing many years ago, Robert Sanderson and other Deaf leaders recognized that Utah's Deaf, Deafblind and Hard of Hearing senior citizens ages 55 and older faced unique gaps in services and opportunities. Prior attempts to access various seniors center operated by cities and counties were unsuccessful to many due to communication barriers. Our leaders believed our seniors are entitled to equal to access information that affects the health and well-being of older people and that Deaf and Hard of Hearing should also have a place to meet to socialize and engage in opportunities that prevent isolation. When developing the Utah Community Center for the Deaf and Hard of Hearing (as it was called at the time), the leaders made sure this group will not go unnoticed and a program would be set up for them at the center. Today we have that program and it is growing!

Our 55+ Senior Citizens Program is offered to any Deaf, Deafblind or Hard of Hearing Senior (ASL is not required). We strive to provide workshops and social events for our seniors. In conjunction with the Wasatch Deaf Seniors Club (separate from our senior program and a good partner!), most workshops are scheduled on Wednesday afternoons so they can conveniently join. Some topics we've had recently were: Cooking in a Budget, How to Read Food Labels, Food Safety, Elder Abuse in the Senior Community and Living and Health Care Options for Aging Seniors. More workshops to come! The program also tries to coordinate a field trip to various places once a month. These field trips are typically done on a Thursday or Friday and registration is required. Sometimes seniors from other cities such as Ogden will meet us or take the Front Runner train to SLC to join us. Some places we have visited in the last year are The Loveland Living Planet Aquarium, The Dinosaur Museum in Vernal, The Leonardo Museum, Hill Air Force Base, Fort Douglas Museum, Tulip Festival and Peach Days! The Sanderson Center tries to support these events by offering transportation from the center and entrance fees when we can. The group usually goes to a restaurant nearby for lunch after the field trip and brings their own money for their lunch. Coming up on October 20th we will go the Gardner Village to see the Halloween exhibits and participate in a scavenger hunt. In November we will go the Dickens Festival at the Sandy Expo.

If you have suggestions for a workshop topic or a place to visit, please let me know. Joene Nicolaisen: jfnicolaisen@utah.gov or call me at 801-657-5218 VP.

If you would like to get emails or a letter with flyers and announcements about the 55+ Senior Citizens Program, contact Jenefer Reudter to be put on our mailing lists. You can reach her at jreudter@utah.gov or call at 801-657-5203 VP.

Enjoy a few pictures from our adventures! Hope to see you here!

Get to know Gael Hannan

Hearing Loss Advocate, Writer, Speaker, Humorist

By, Robin Traveller

I met Gael at the Portland (2013), Washington DC (2007) and Seattle (2002) Hearing Loss Association of America (HLAA) conventions. I love her witty sense of humor! I've learned a lot from her.

Gael is from Toronto, Canada and has progressive hearing loss that is now severe-to-profound. She's one busy lady who is the Director on the national board of the Canadian Hard of Hearing Association (CHHA) and an editor for her weekly column for the Hearing Health Matters. Below are two websites for you to check into.

I'm sure by now you're wondering why I'm writing about Gael. Her example has made me a better advocate to the hard of hearing people. She has always made her conversation very interesting. I learned that her words have become "life lessons" to help the hard of hearing people that I associate with.

There's an article called, "Sneaky Tricks to Hear Un-Hearable Sounds." To summarize it, Gael pointed out that there are some sounds we may never hear again but is there nothing we can do about that? Instead of throwing up your hands, maybe we could bypass conventional communication and try a new, sneaky strategy? Gael said, "Be sneaky. Play tricks. Do whatever it takes to understand what's going on such as rephrase comments; eliminate words that are difficult to hear or speechread; manipulate the listening environment to your advantage; and know the topic being discussed. Bluffing is against the rules in any communication!!" It's a very good article. I challenge all of you to read her article in the Hearing Health Matters website.

I will write more articles about well-known hard of hearing people in the future Sanderson Center's newsletter. It is important for the hard of hearing people get to know who they are because they will inspire YOU!

Unity for Gallaudet:
The Second Social Movement at Gallaudet University
The workshop will focus on the 2006 Gallaudet University Social Movement, a group of people fighting for their rights to a leader that would represent them in the best way as a minority group. The goal of this presentation is to study the details of the protest and to clear up misconceptions and questions the audience may have through a group discussion. This protest has become an important milestone in recent Deaf history and it is important that the community helps put an end to those misconceptions.
